

Dear Kerry;

Just got Tompkin's book, and my wife tells me that you sent it. What a lovely Christmas present, thank you very much. It sure is nice to have someone back up everything I've been talking about, and fill in some of the gaps. I read the whole thing last night, and while he jumps around a lot, and has a few detail mistakes (that can be chocked up to age-related memory glitches), the information is invaluable for any researcher in the field. And while I don't remember meeting the gentleman, where would have been no reason as we were on very different levels of the adventure. Again, I'm impressed, and will likely quote some of his conversations in my own work in the future.

How the world has changed since our visit, with Trump on his way to the White House, a woman in Number 10, and reptoids seen in Turkey and Syria. Brings me back to our AI conversation, and as I just read some good reports on it I want to touch on it a bit more before we let it go
